A spokesman for Nottingham-shire County police said the trouble began late Tuesday night when 500 men descended on the mining village of Sutton-in-Ashfield. About 60,000 of the 183,000 members of the National Union of Mineworkers have defied the strike call and many of them work in Nottinghamshire. Their refusal to strike has enraged union militants.

The police spokesman said the miners attacked 18 cars belonging to working miners at the Silverhill mine at Sutton-in-Ashfield and smashed dozens of office windows at the pit.

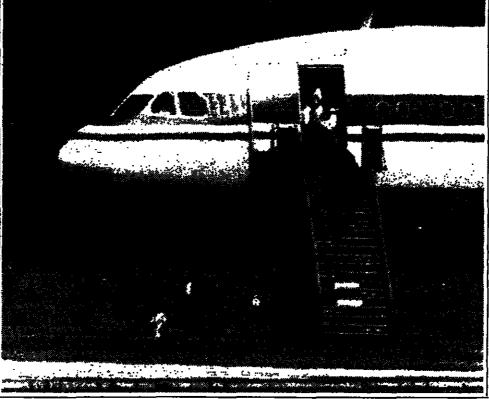

About an hour later, 1,000 men swept through the village of Bircotes and attacked the Harworth mine nearby, again smashing windows and damaging cars of working miners. They also overturned a police car.

Shortly afterward, the police said, about 150 men attacked the regional offices of the National Coal Board in Doncaster. They arrived in a convoy of 30 cars and a truck, jumped out and hurled bricks and rocks.

In another development, two Yorkshire miners said they had started legal action to force the union to hold a strike ballot. The Union leaders have ignored all calls for a national ballot, saying miners "voted with their feet" by joining the strike.

WASHINGTON - The Soviet Union has more than doubled its deployment of $$-20 mediumrange nuclear missiles, most of them aimed at Western Europe, since 1979, according to intelli-gence sources and officials in the Reagan administration.

The sources said this week that Moscow now had 378 SS-20s carrying a total of 1,134 nuclear warheads. This compares to 140 SS-20s with three warheads each in De-cember 1979. That was the date on which the North Atlantic Treaty Organization decided to deploy 572 Pershing-2 ballistic missiles and ground-launched cruise missiles with one warhead each by 1989 — unless an arms control agreement were reached first with he Soviet Union.

The president has maintained that a ibstantial U.S. military buildup is the best way to bring Moscow to the bargaining table and gain Soviet concessions.

By the Reagan administration's own testimony, there is no question that changes in the nuclear balance in Europe and Asia have put the United States in a weaker position.

In his annual report to Congress earlier this year, Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger stated that the SS-20 deployments "have eroded the credibility of NATO's deterrent posture." But Reagan administration offi-

BERN (AP) - Two Soviet soldiers captured by Afghan rebels and interned in Switzerland for two years under an international agreement were released Wednesday and returned to the Soviet Union, the Swiss

The two were not identified by the Foreign Office or the International Committee of the Red Cross in Geneva, which negotiated the internment accord. Under the agreement, soldiers captured by Afghans fighting Soviet forces are to be interned in Switzerland for two years, or until the end of "hostilities" in Afghanistan.

The first three internees were released in May. The return of two more Soviet prisoners on Wednesday leaves five Russians still interned at the military detention center at Zugerberg, south of Zurich.

Ex-Astronaut Wins Senate Primary

DETROIT (AP) - Jack Lousma, a former astronaut, has won Michigan's Republican primary election for a U.S. Senate seat. Mr. Lousma won more than 60 percent of the vote Tuesday to defeat a former congressman, Jim Dunn. Mr. Lousma will run against Senator Carl Levin, a Democrat, in November.

In Missouri, the attorney general and lieutenant governor will run against each other to succeed Governor Christopher Bond, a Republican, who was prohibited by state law from seeking a third term. In primaries, Lieutenant Governor Kenneth Rothman defeated six Democratic rivals, and Attorney General John Ashcroft defeated a Republican challenger and a perennial candidate.

A convicted felon, Alex Fazzino, also won a Missouri House primary election, which he described as a decision by a "jury of my peers." In the Democratic primary two weeks after he was convicted of extorting money in return for a legislative favor on a bill, Mr. Fazzino easily won his bid to seek a ninth consecutive term. He has no Republican opposition but first must face sentencing of up to 20 years in prison.

U.S., Uganda Discuss Aid Suspension

WASHINGTON (AP) — The governments of Uganda and the United States have begun discussing Kampala's decision to suspend a $100,000 U.S. military aid program, following remarks by U.S. officials on the alleged deterioration of human rights in Uganda

But Alan Romberg, the State Department's deputy spokesman, said Wednesday that diplomatic efforts have been hampered by faulty communications between Washington and Kampala because of a power outage in the Ugandan capital.

Ugandan officials announced the suspension of the program on Tues-day. They cited, among other complaints, critical comments by Elliott Abrams, assistant secretary of state for human rights. He is scheduled to testify on Capitol Hill on the subject Thursday.

Retrial Opens in War Crime Case

DUSSELDORF, West Germany (AP) — A new trial opened Wednesday for a former SS sergeant accused of administering lethal injections to ill prisoners in a World War II concentration camp in the Soviet Union. Hans-Günther Wisner, 67, is charged with murdering at least two prisoners and playing a role in selecting another for execution while he was working from 1943 to 1944 as an orderly at a concentration camp in

A Düsseldorf court sentenced Mr. Wisner last year to six years in prison on charges involving the extermination of 31 prisoners at Riga. He appealed to a higher court, which returned the case to the lower tribunal saying the jury had not fully considered the fact that Mr. Wisner had to carry out orders by his superiors. All but three counts were thrown out for lack of evidence in the new trial.

Saudi King, Swiss Settle Complaint

GENEVA (Reuters) — King Fahd of Saudi Arabia has paid an adisclosed sum to neighbors of his Geneva villa who claimed damages for inconvenience caused by building work, lawyers from the king and his ighbors said Wednesday. The out-of-court settlement led to the withdrawal of a civil complaint seeking 450,000 Swiss francs (about $220,000) for inconvenience as a result of noise, dust and Sunday work that the neighbors said they suffered during the building of the 27-room lakeside home.

The neighbors also claimed disturbance from cameras peering into their homes, all-night security floodlights and electronic devices that interfered with television reception. King Fahd has yet to visit his new home, which took four years to build.

Tax Issue Catches Reagan on Defensive

By Steven R. Weisman

SANTA BARBARA, California To the surprise of some of his supporters, President Ronald Reagan's re-election campaign has been thrown on the defensive and caught up in apparent contradictions over the issue of raising taxes to reduce the federal deficit.

unusual statement of Walter F. Mondale that he would raise taxes if elected president. A senior White House official predicted then that Mr. Reagan would easily dismiss the Democratic presidential nominee's contention that the president would also raise taxes in 1985.

The day after Mr. Mondale made his assertion in his acceptance speech in San Francisco, a senior White House aide said that the Reagan campaign had just been handed a wonderful gift: an opportunity to hammer at one of Mr.

Reagan's favorite messages.

White House officials mainpoint was still getting across. "We still think the impression is out there that Ronald Reagan doesn't want to raise taxes, and Walter Mondale does want to raise taxes." said a presidential aid:..

Bad Population Politics

Delegates to the second International Conference on Population, under way in Mexico City, can take note of some progress in the past decade, while planning to meet a continuing crisis in the remaining years of the century. Since the first United Nations-sponsored meeting in Bucharest 10 years ago, there has been a measurable and important decline in the rate of population growth, not only in the developed world but in some poorer countries as well. Mexico is a good example of both the progress and the problems.

Ten years ago Mexico's population was growing at a rate of 3.3 percent. Now, because the country has devoted resources and energy to population planning, the growth rate is only 2.6 percent. Unfortunately, even at this rate its population will double in the next 26 years, in part because death rates have been declining.

In countries that have less successful programs, the situation is already critical. Fortytwo percent of all children under age 5 suffer from malnutrition; in the Third World, one in 10 die before their first birthday. One-fourth of the world's families live in makeshift shelter. A billion people lack clean drinking water, and 2 billion have no basic sanitation facilities.

In light of these statistics, and of projections recently published by the World Bank that can conservatively be described as frightening, what is the responsibility of the United States? Traditionally it has provided leadership, resources, teachers and health experts to this international effort. But the position advocated in Mexico City by Reagan administration delegates heraids a change. Although U.S. law already prohibits the expenditure of any U.S. aid money for abortions, the Reagan administration would go far beyond this restriction, cutting off all funds to any organization — the International Planned Parenthood Federation, for example — that uses other money for abortion programs. Because many of these groups are dependent on U.S. support, a withdrawal of funds would severely restrict the very programs that the Reagan administration sees as an acceptable alternative to abortion.

U.S. delegates go also with the message that if the free-enterprise system is allowed to work, there will be sufficient economic growth to forestall crisis. Robert McNamara, former president of the World Bank, rightly assesses this naive and dangerous theory: "Americans will be laughed out of the conference if they stress that theme. It's absurd."

It is tragic that domestic political pressures have threatened U.S. commitment to international population assistance at a time when Third World countries need U.S. help most. - THE WASHINGTON POST.

Misleading Indicators

The U.S. government's index of "leading economic indicators" dropped nine-tenths of 1 percent in June — the first drop in almost two years, some news reports said. True, but misleading. The index is a composite of 12 monthly statistics that can foretell trends. Claims for unemployment insurance, for instance, predict shifts in unemployment. New building permits signal future construction. When all 12 numbers are blended and the index rises or falls consistently, it is saying that general activity will rise or fall.

When the index reverses direction for a few months, turning up in recession or down in a boom, it is signaling change. One month's reversal is meaningless (also in the case of the erratic upturn in July's unemployment). The "leading" index often bobs up and down after a boom or recession is more than a year old. Besides, it is routinely revised. In the year before June, four minus months were revised into pluses; March swung from minus 1.1 to plus 0.3 percent. That is because the index is first published four weeks after a month's end, without two of the 12 components - inventories and loan activity.

Why doesn't the Commerce Department wait for final numbers? That would take three or four more weeks - too long for impatient planners, forecasters and the media. As is, the leading indicators only signaled the last recession by a hair; it began three months after the index started pointing down. But the index has signaled one recession 23 months in advance.

No economist relies on any single statistic for the whole picture, and most wait to see three months of this index before calling a trend. But the heightened attention that this statistic gets warrants its perfection. With recovery now 20 months old and an election at stake, the American economy attracts global interest. Steady but slower growth is desirable. Misleading indicators will not detect it.

- THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Notable, Notorious, Gone

Among the memorable Welshmen created by Shakespeare is the crackbrained mystic, Owen Glendower of "Henry IV," who claims. among other things, the power to "call spirits from the vasty deep." To which his ally in arms, Hotspur, replies sarcastically, "But will they come when you do call for them?"

For Richard Burton, the flamboyant Welsh actor who died last Sunday at age 58, the magic did come forth quite often when he called it, although certainly not nearly so many times as he set foot on stage or before the camera. A brilliant stage actor, he joined the westward parade of British writers and actors that has been going on fairly steadily since Hollywood was invented, and in doing so, many of his critics said, he failed to fulfill his promise. But he did not fail to make a dent.

Two marriages to Elizabeth Taylor and legendary bouts of drinking punctuated a screen and stage career that would have been notable even without the notoriety, encompassing as it did some truly great performances as well as some dismal ones. "He chose a rather mad way of throwing away his theater career, but obviously he became very famous and a world figure through being a film star," said Sir John Gielgud, Said Mr. Burton once: "I rather like my reputation ... that of a spoiled genius from the Welsh gutter, a drunk, a womanizer. it's rather an attractive image." But a rakish image of the sort that pleased

Mr. Burton takes its toll, and in his later performances he often appeared as a puffyfaced caricature of his younger and riveting self. One thing he did not lose was the voice, a voice that stays in the mind when much else about his acting has gone out of it. He recorded some Shakespeare, and it may be one of his finer monuments. His portrayal of Coriolanus on record, in which this son of a Welsh coal miner plays with perfect icy disdain the aristocratic Roman military hero who cannot bring himself to make the slightest gesture to please the mob, brings a special dimension to a play whose lines, coming from a less convincing actor, could sound ridiculous in these democratic times. Unlike Coriolanus, Mr. Burton made his concessions to the popular taste, but like him he wore his flaws on his toga and he did things on a memorable scale.

Pakistani Fear of Encirclement

There is no need to be an American "hawk" to appreciate the worries caused Pakistan by the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. Moral condemnation of the rape of an independent na-tion and the economic difficulties involved in integrating more than 3 million refugees are at present only secondary considerations. The proximity of Russian forces, underscored by repeated violations of Pakistan's airspace and taken in conjunction with the close contacts between Moscow and Delhi, have created a fear of encirclement that pins Pakistan's armed forces to its Indian and Afghan frontiers and inhibits the country's foreign policy activities, notably the application of pressure on Iran to end the Gull war. All these factors are given extra weight by the fact that Islam-abad can no longer rely on Chinese backing as it could in the '60s and '70s.

- Neue Zürcher Zeitung (Zurich). Romania: Time Out for Medals

Whatever the motivation, the Romanian presence at the Los Angeles Olympic Games should be welcomed. But let us not forget that Romania is still part of the Soviet bloc and likely to remain so for some time, albeit reluctantly. Its "independence" is a heavily qualified one, and would not be permitted to go beyond the gadfly stage in a really critical moment in East-West relations.

1909: Wall Street and the Tariff Bill NEW YORK - The country breathes more freely now that Congress has dispersed, and Wall Street is convinced that the revised tariff will cause no dislocation of business. Traders who "sold on the good news" when the passage of the bill was announced [on Aug. 5] were compelled to repurchase. The provision in the Tariff Bill for an issue of Panama Canal bonds excites no alarm, as it is expected that none will be issued for some time and that when they are offered precautions will be taken to prevent an unsettlement of values. There is agitation against the provision of the bill which imposes a 1 percent tax upon the income of private business corporations. Suit will be brought to test the constitutionality of the law.

1934: Liners' Logs on Sea Serpents PARIS —Still seeking publicity but as elusive about it as Greta Garbo, the sea monster. which may be the Loch Ness serpent or a jealous rival, has again been heard from. Two trans-Atlantic liners have come within hailing distance of it. Officers of the Cuba sighted it 800 miles off the Azores. Part of the ship's log read: "It was approximately 25 meters long, four or five meters high, with a small head and a long neck, with two humps on its back." The Mauretania's log read: "We sighted a sea serpent approximately 60 feet long. It was deep black and had a long, flat head. There were four humps on its back." Only in the number of humps do the accounts disagree, but what is a hump or two among sea serpents?

A Different Tune

G ENEVA — The world's population has doubled to 4.8 billion since 1950, adding 2.5 billion people in less than a generation. If present trends continue, the ligure will be close to 10 billion within two more generations. Such growth could perpetuate poverty in most of the developing countries, which already have nearly a billion destitute people, including 150 million in famine conditions.

The import needs of developing countries in cereals alone would jump to 250 million metric tons by the year 2000 from 105 million currently, and the number of people denied two square meals a day would rise by a third. These alarming forecasts by the World Bank and United Nations experts are the backdrop to the 150-nation International Conference on Population being held in Mexico City from Aug. 6 to 13.

Within 70 years, Third World countries may contain 8.5 billion people, up from to-day's 3.8 billion, but they would share barely 20 percent of the world's production.

growth will be lost. One reason is the heavy reliance on government intervention rather than on motivating people by creating conditions in which having large families becomes unnecessary. Another is the reluctance of Western governments to increase aid for Third World economic development.

The central issue in voluntary birth control is that of incentives. Couples must be persnaded to forgo the private gain of having another child in favor of the gain to society of not having one. But incentives work only if those at whom they are aimed see a long-term benefit in allowing themselves to be enticed.

The government in India has tried giving gifts to those who accept sterilization. The reach government offers cash and medals to those who agree to have large families. Neither has been able to make men and women go against their own personal judgments.

CEATTLE — A record U.S. miliatary budget is emerging from fi-nal Senate-House negotiations. What About Women?

Recent articles - "U.S. Revises Aid Policy on Birth Control" by Bill Keller (July 14), "The Case for Family Planning" by Hobart Rowen (July 20) and the editorials "Yes to Family 20) and the editorials "Yes to Family Planning" (July 14) and "Population Politicking" (June 22) — are critical of the White House position paper on population. I agree with the conclusion that family planning programs should be supported, but the arguments in favor are often weak.

Simplistic, either/or arguments about population control vs. economic development as cause of or care for poverty are meaningless un-less put in the context of specific socioeconomic situations and unlesss income distribution is measured. The articles and editorials do not seriously address the abortion issue. which motivated the Reagan admin-istration's position. What is most curious, however, is that there is not one word about women. Hundreds of thousands of women die each year from illegal abortions performed by untrained persons in unhygienic conditions; and untold numbers more suffer from related infections for years afterward. Millions risk illegal abortion because they have no access to safe abortions, nor to safe and effective contraception.

Poor women are dying from complications of pregnancy and child-birth — deaths which could have been prevented. The World Health lization estimates that rates are 250-to-1,000 per 100,000 live births in parts of the developing world, where-as they are closer to 10-to-20 per 100,000 in developed countries. The deaths result from bad health and malnutrition, linked with excessive pregnancies; and they reflect the interrelated conditions of women's poverty and low status.

Poor women, too, are the targets of population control programs. They suffer from negative effects of contraceptives and die from abuses of sterilization. They face agonizing threats from husbands and families for violating social customs.

It is poor women, the vast majority of women in the Third World, whose situations have become worse be-cause of the types of economic develcause of the types of economic development policies and population control policies implemented in their countries, assisted by the U.S. government and the World Bank—policies which are designed and carried out without women's involvement and without women's involvement and without regard for their needs.

Let us hope that the Mexico City conference focuses on ways to improve existing contraceptives and to ensure women's access to safe, effective and acceptable family planning methods. The conference should also promote equitable development for the benefit of the whole population women, children and men.

Battle Under Way for Afrikaners' Soul

Rightists Seek to Regain Control, Block Establishment's Easing of Apartheid

By Glenn Frankel

PRETORIA, South Africa - A stately stone mansion in an eastern suburb of this capital city has become the headquarters of a crusade to recreate South African history.

There, under the watchful gaze of a watercolor portrait of apartheid's chief evangelist and archi-tect, the late Hendrik Verwoerd, members of a new generation are trying to mobilize fellow white Afrikaners into rejecting changes they think will destroy white political power and the culture they have built for 300 years.

Third of four articles

The main political leader of this movement is Andries P. Treurnicht, a member of Parliament and former Dutch Reformed minister. He broke two years ago with the majority in theruling National Party over the government's constitutional plan to extend limited political rights to South Africans of mixed-race and Asian descent.

He and other rightist members of the party were then expelled, and they formed a new political organization, the Conservative Party of South Africa. Its power base is in the traditional rural centers of the Afrikaner community.

But the movement's spiritual leader is Carel Boshoff, Mr. Verwoerd's son-in-law, who at age 56 has broken ranks with the Afrikaner establishment he epitomized

From their mansion home, he and his wife, Anna, have launched Afrikaner Volkswag (Sentinels of the People), a cultural movement whose ambitious goal is to reunite the Afrikaner community behind traditional policies and recapture the leadership role they contend

In the close-knit, deeply religious, ancestor-conscious world of the Afrikaner, many people think it is Mr. Boshoff, not Mr. Treurnicht, who poses the ultimate threat to the government. He is purposefully following the same blueprint that the Dutch-descended Afrikaners used in the 1930s and 1940s to win control of South Africa from the English-speaking whites.

"It is a war for the Afrikaners' soul, and it is being waged in all fields," said Willem Kleynhans, a political scientist at the University of South Africa. "Mr. Boshoff is claiming all the symbols of Afrikaner nationalism: the history, the heroes, the flags."

Despite the fact that the Afrikaner right is outnumbered by the Nationalists — in Parliament the margin is 125 seats to 17 — few analysts are willing to dismiss its potential, for the Conservatives speak to some of the deepest emotions in the Afrikaners: their sense of group identity, their respect for the past and their fears.

Public opinion surveys consistently show Afrikaners to be more fearful of integration than their English-speaking white counterparts. A poll by the sociologist Nic J. Rhoodie last year in Randburg, a Johannesburg suburb generally held to be a liberal outpost, showed 71 percent of the Afrikaners there adamantly opposed to the desegregation of public facilities such as swimming pools, libraries and adult education centers.

The view was shared by 20 percent of English speakers. The gap was even more striking with blacks; 93 percent of them said they favored full desegregation.

"In our minds we may be for reform, but in our hearts all Afrikaners are HNP," said Rene Reyneke, a young commodities market worker in Pretoria, referring to the Herstigte National Party, the most

This is the heart of Mr. Boshoff's appeal. "In 1959, Dr. Verwoerd came to a vote. said the policy of the National Party is to strive for a permanent white South Africa, no matter what the dangers," he said. "That is still our position. It's the National Party that has drifted away, not us."

Both Mr. Bosholl and Mr. Treurnicht, in separate interviews, denied that racism was the motivating factor behind apartheid. Likewise, both men, who consider themselves devout Christians, insisted that they were aware of the personal suffering —families being torn apart, people forced to move from their longtime homes and the petty humiliations caused by inferior legal status — that the apatheid system has imposed on blacks.

"We are not insensitive to these problems," said Mr. Treurnicht, but we do believe that in the long run the races are so different that they are better off living apart. A unitary system will only lead to friction and bloodshed." And so, the Conservatives say, the entire structure of apartheid must be maintained even to the petty details, such as separate parks and water fountains. Because the economy needs black labor, some will be allowed to remain in the whites' territory, but only as guests.

All blacks, even those who have spent their entire life in urban areas, will lose their South African citizenship and be required to become citizens of the rural "home-lands." That is the ultimate logic of separate development," the modem euphemism for apartheid.

For the Nationalists, the existence of the Conservative movement validates their claim to be a party of reform. It also serves as a convenient bogeyman to cite to critics who contend that the Nationalists are moving too slowly.

At the same time, National Party supporters tend to dismiss the threat from the right as weak and

> "The people around the Conservatives are mostly old has-beens," said Piet Cillie, a retired Afrikaner newspaper editor and influential National Party supporter. "There's a big difference between angry old men and angry young men, and I'd be worried if they had the young ones, but they don't."

Nevertheless, the Afrikaner establishment has launched what appears to be a coordinated campaign to strip Mr. Boshoff of his special status in white society. It began a year ago when he was forced to resign as chairman of the Broederbond the secret Afrikaner society, after another Afrikaner institution he beads, the South African Bureau of Racial Affairs, issued a report critical of the new constitutional

It heated up again following the formal launching of Volkswag in May. Cabinet ministers have called for Mr. Boshoff to step down from the chairmanship of the Voor-trekkers, the Afrikaner equivalent of the Boy Scouts.

Others have pushed for his resignation from the faculty of the University of Pretoria, where he heads the theology department. He has refused to leave either position, but he has been forced to issue public statements eschewing overt poli-

The campaign against Mr. Boshoff suggests to some analysts that the Afrikaner establishment is more frightened by the Conservative movement than its members will admit publicly.

"No one should write off the Conservatives," said John van der Vyver, law professor at the University of Wilswatersrand in Johannesburg. "They are following a political pattern that has worked here before and they have the potential to win sometime in the future."

Nimeiri's Plan to Make Sudan an Islamic State Stalls Amid Opposition

By Olfat Tohamy Washington Post Service

CAIRO - The drive by President Gaafar Niniciri of Sudan to turn his country into an Islamic republic has stalled as a result of increasing domestic opposition. General Nimeiri announced in September that he was making Islamic law the law of the land.

The decision was followed by changes in the criminal law system that mandated harsh Islamic punishments for crimes, such as the amoutation of hands and feet for theft and flogging for possession of alcohol, Later, General Nimeiri proposed constitutional amendments that would permit him to proclaim laws without getting par- army. iamentary endorsement.

About 70 percent of Sudan's 20 million people are said to be Mos-lem, but the Islamic codes have angered residents in the south which is mostly Christian or ani-mist. Animists believe in the existence of spirits separable from bod-

The measures have also strained ties with Egypt and the United States. Egypt helped General Nimeiri take over after a coup, and the two countries are linked by a mutual defense pact.

The United States also has announced that it will cease to provide weapons and other military, equipment to Sudan to fight the nsurgents in the south.

In a June 12 memorandum to General Nimeiri, the second vice president, Joseph Lagu, and his predecessor. Abel Alier, who is now in exile, warned the president against changing the Sudanese constitution. Both are Christian politi cal leaders from the south.

They reaffirmed their commit-ment to the 1972 Addis Ababa agreement that ended a 17-year civil war and granted autonomy to the

As General Nimeiri moved to implement Islamic law, or sharia, he also redivided the southern half of the country and changed the political formula there, a move that has led to a renewal of rebel activity in the region. The two leaders referred to a clause in the agreement providing for peaceful coexistence among al religions in Sudan and said that "it was not at all wise then to legislate against traditional beliefs, nor could there be a justification for it They asked General Nimeiri to dent would become imam, or the religious and political authority in the country, and he would thus be above questioning or trial. He would appoint all top government and army officials.

Consideration of the proposals ended July 11 when a petition signed by 98 of the 151 members of parliament requested that the debate be adjourned. The move, sponsored by 37 members from the south, has delayed voting on the subject until the parliament, or National People's Assembly, reconvenes in November.

Despite this, some of General Nimeiri's opponents say the president could seek to have the changes put into effect by the recently formed Shura council, a grouping of top government officials dominated by the Moslem Brotherhood. General Nimeiri's decision to implement Islamic law triggered the formation three weeks ago in London of the National Salvation Front, which cites as its objective "overthrowing the dictatorship im-posed on the Sudanese people."

The grouping comprises Mr. Lagu's Sudan African National Union, Mr. Alier's Southern Front, the Sudanese Communist Party. the National Unionist Party and the Umma Party, whose leader, Sadeq Mahdi, is in prison.

Rising Carbon Dioxide Level Affects Growth Rates of Plants

By Erik Eckholm

ANCIENT, gnarled pine trees struggling to survive at timberline in the mountains of Nevada and California have grown surprisingly fat, perhaps pre-saging momentous changes in the landscape of the Earth.

Scientists measuring those trees believe they provide the first evidence that the growth of the Earth's vegetation is being accelerated by the rise in atmosoheric carbon dioxide.

Quite apart from its much-discussed climatic implications, the continuing climb in CO₂, through its direct effect on photosynthesis, may profoundly transform the balance of nature over the decades to come, many scientists warn. Some species could be driven to extinction. Familiar natural haunts may be taken over by new mixes of grasses and trees, of butterflies and birds. And human diets will be altered along the way. The buildup of CO2 in the atmosphere has already caused alarm because of the climatic changes expected to result from the so-called greenhouse effect, which will warm the Earth as the CO₂ level rises.

But plant scientists are now urgently investigating what they say has been a generally overlooked aspect of the CO2 problem. More CO2 in the air will directly spur plant growth. Some species will receive a much greater boost than others, presumably causing changes in their relative abundance that will ripple through food chains, reordering wildlife populations as well.

"In the competitive conditions of nature, there will be winners and losers," said Fakhri A. Bazzaz, a plant ecologist at Harvard University. "Some plant species could be eliminated from an ecosystem, while the most responsive ones could begin to dominate it." He said he worries about the "possibility of catastrophic effects in some ecosystems." Beyond the potential esthetic and scientific losses, researchers are not yet able to say just how the world's economic interests will be affected

The fact that increased CO₂ promotes photo synthesis has long been known to botanists and even exploited commercially by greenhouse farmers. Now researchers from the Tree Ring Laboratory at the University of Arizona, measuring pencil-thin cross sections from aged bristlecone and limber pines in the West, have found growth rates to have roughly doubled time 1950.

"These are very, very slow-growing trees, and the later rings are obviously much wider, said researcher Valmore LaMarche. "We can't find climate trends that would explain it. We believe that this is strong evidence that natural vegetation is already responding to elevated CO2 levels."

Although the response of individual plants, especially commercial species, to CO₂ enrichment in greenhouses has long been studied, research is just beginning on the vastly more complex issue of how natural communities will respond to the carbon diox-

An increase in planetary photosynthesis will have its beneficial sides. Since growing plants incorporate carbon from the air into their tissues, stepped-up growth will have the welcome result of slowing the increase of atmospheric CO2, in turn delaying the arrival of severe climatic changes from the greenhouse threatened rainfall shifts, regard the prospect of more CO₂ in the air as good news. Not only will crops grow boost the efficiency with which plants make use of Taking best advantage of these gains will require adaptations in farming and dietary patterns, though, because some crops will be spurred more than others, changing their comparative economics. Corn, for example, may lose ground to wheat and soybeans because its productivity will not rise as sharply. Consumption of potatoes and yams may jump since tubers respond especially well to CO2.

Those studying natural communities are less inclined to equate bigger with better.

"Our perspective is different from the agriculturalists," observed Boyd R. Strain, a plant ecologist at Duke University. "The higher growth of one species can be disastrous for the ecosystem."

Laboratory studies have shown wide variations in the response of different plant species to higher CO₂.

A broad distinction exists between those that assimilate carbon dioxide through what are known as the C3 and C4 pathways. Photosynthesis in plants of the C3 and C4 painways. Frotosynthesis in plants of the C3 category — the majority of plant species including most trees and such crops as wheat and potatoes — is strongly limited by the level of CO₂ in the air. As carbon dioxide rises their growth will be spurred

In contrast, the C4 plants — including many grasses, shrubs, and corn - are less constrained by the current CO₂ concentration, and will not benefit as much from elevated levels.

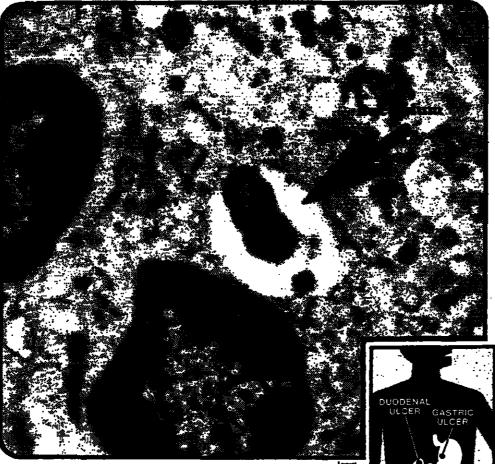

WHEN one plant species gains or loses, its competitors, consumers, and pollinators will all be affected, with reverberations throughout the local web of

For a plant species, even being one of the initial photosynthetic "winners" may not be lucky. If accelcrated growth results in a spindlier stem, a plant might become susceptible to wind damage; if a traditionally obscure plant begins to poke through the underbrush, predators may find the feasting uncommonly easy.

The CO2-induced increase in the Earth's total biomass should be much less than what the often dramatic responses of individual plants in greenhouses would suggest. In nature, plants are usually engaged in in-tense competition for light, space, nutrients, and mois-ture; limiting factors other than photosynthetic capac-ity will hold down the system-wide response. "Just because someone gives you a Rolls-Royce doesn't make you a rich man; you still need a big house and everything else that goes with a wealthy lifestyle," is the analogy drawn by John Hoffman, director of strategic studies at the Environmental Protection

Many botanists argue that vegetation must already have been affected by the increase in atmospheric carbon dioxide from an estimated 260 parts per million to 280 parts per million before the Industrial Revolution to nearly 345 ppm today. Hence they regard the conclusion of the University of Arizona scientists as plausible.

Predicting how heightened CO₂ will alter ecosys-tems presents a formidable research challenge. Until recently it was largely ignored in government grants. A new research strategy drawn up by the Department of Energy's Carbon Dioxide Research Division allots $2.5 million, of a total 1984 research budget of $12.5 Agricultural scientists, though worried by the million, for studies of the direct effects of CO₂ on plants, including crops, an encouraging if still inade-co₂ in the air as good news. New York Times Service WO Australian researchers have discovered what appears to be a new spiral-shaped bacterium living

The finding of one more microorganism among the thousands known might have been no more than a curiosity if the Australian bacterium were not now being tentatively linked to some of the most painful ailments known: gastritis, peptic ulcers in the stomach and duodenum, and perhaps other problems as well. Several million Americans have these ailments, whose origins are often unknown.

While there is a great deal of skepticism about the importance of the finding, there is a great deal of one slender projection known as a flagellum emerging excitement, too, as the potential implications begin to from one end of the S, the newly discovered organisms excitement, too, as the potential implications begin to

The new bacteria resemble the S-shaped ones that belong to the genus Campylobacter. But an important difference is that whereas Campylobacter have at most one slender projection known as a flagellum emerging from one end of the S, the newly discovered organisms have up to four flagella.

Drug Aids Victims of Rare Disease WASHINGTON (UPI) — The US Food and Drug Administration has approved a drug to treat victims of a rare disease called Tourette Syndrome. The disease afflicts 100,000 Americans, causing involuntary blinking, shrugging, barking, shricking and — in 30 percent of the cases

The drug, pinnozide, was approved under a special program that allows tax credits and other incentives to firms making products that can help only a relatively few people and therefore are not profitable.

Hibernating Sheep Goal of Research

LONDON (Reuters) - A British scientist says it is only a matter of time before sheep and other farm animals can be induced by genetic engineering to sleep through the winter, a development that could dramatically reduce costs for farmers.

Dr. Richard Lathe, senior scientist at a government laboratory in Edinburgh, said researchers hoped to be able to identify and activate the genes that slow the heartbeat, eventually allowing farm animals to sleep through the winter like bears, saving money on food and care. The laboratory was also looking at the possibility of gene control to enable cows to produce milk all year round, he said.

for a 1986 rendezvous, may be irregular in shape or nave a patchy surface and appears to be rotating, new photographs show.

The photos, taken through a 200-inch (508-centimeter) telescope at Palomar Observatory in California, show that the light reflected from the comet varies regularly in intensity over a period of hours.

The finding implies that the comet, which passes close enough to Earth to be visible every 76 years, could be rotating and either have an irregular shape or dark or light patches on its surface, scientists said.

Turtle-Watching Is a Lonely Job

BLACKBEARD ISLAND, Georgia (AP) — While most people are asleep, Pani Gideon, the only resident of Blackbeard Island, keeps track of turtles.

Mr. Gideon, 24, a researcher for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, studies the mating and nesting habits of rare loggerhead turtles, which lay their eggs at night. "It's a pretty busy job, 24 hours a day," Mr. Gideon said. "But somebody has to help these loggerheads or they might become

Vegetables Called Good for Sex Life

LONDON (AP) — Fruit and vegetables can help your sex life, claims a report by the Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Information Bureau.

Melons, mangoes, apricots, carrots and spinach are rich in vitamin A, which helps convert cholestrol into active sex hormones, while potances. bananas and other fruits and vegetables contain vitamin B, which helps manufacture sex hormones, the report said.

Dr. Vernon Coleman, author of the book "Bodypower," disputed the findings. "To suggest that individual vegetables have approdisiac properties is nonsense," he said. "The only true approdisiac is another person

Royals Hand Brewers 10th Straight Loss

KANSAS CITY, Missouri — Dane lorg and George Brett each hit two-run home runs in the eighth inning Tuesday night to lift the Kansas City Royals to a 8-5 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

The loss was Milwaukee's 10th straight, equaling the longest losing

U.S. Women Win Basketball Gold, Volleyball Silver

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches
LOS ANGELES — U.S. women won the gold medal in basketball Tuesday night and the silver in volleyball, bringing the medal total by American women in the Summer Olympics to 47. Of their 21 gold medals, 12 came in swimming; they also have taken 21 silver and 5 bronze medals.

Other gold medals Tuesday went to Frank Wieneke of West Germany in judo, Italian weightlifter Noberto Oberburger, West German fencers in the women's team foil competition and the United States in equestrian team jumping. Romanians Enjoy Triumphant Invasion

By Jay Mathews m Post Service

LOS ANGELES — After centuries of intrusions into their mountain valleys by Romans. Goths, Stavs. Bulgars. Magyars, Turks and Germans, the much put-upon Romanians are enjoying their own triumphant invasion here.

With an army of 127 gymnasts, boxers, rowers, weightlifters and track-and-field athletes, a country with a population slightly less than that of California has bested nearly every other nation at the Summer Olympics. As of Tuesday, Romania had 16 gold medals, trailing only the United States, and was tied for second in overall medals with 36 — this from a country that totaled only 28 gold medals in its last eight Olympic appearances, dating to 1952.

When the Romanian team marched into the Coliseum for the opening ceremonies, its members received a louder, longer roar than any other foreign team. Olympic funds paid for most of their transportation. The arrival of their former Olympic heroine, Nadia Comaneci, was heralded on the front page of the Los Angeles

It would be "extremely awkward," one said, if the Romanians were to come here, and even worse if they won athletic laurels in a smoothly run, successful Games. The Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee offered to pay most of the Romanians' plane fares, to make up for a canceled Soviet-bloc charter flight.

Los Angeles Takes the Olympics in Stride

New York Times Service

LOS ANGELES - It was with mate traffic gridlock and grimness

I listened to the advance rumblings from colleagues and Olymand khakis and helmet, just as in the old days of covering mine disasters and urban disorders.

But the fear and trembling was overrated. Los Angeles is shrugging off the Olympics, just the way my hometown shrugs off big events. In New York, you could have the pope in the Bronx, a presidential campaign in Staten Island, the Luthe World Series in Queens and never know it in Manhattan.

I can't see that the Games have brought any kind of general happiness to southern California, the way the Winter Games did to Sarajevo, or the 1976 Summer Games did to Montreal, before the bills came due. If there is singing in the streets. I haven't found it - and,

Frenchman Pierre Durand didn't have the easiest of days in the Olympic equestrian team jumping competition. When his mount, Jappeloup, balked at one jump, above left, Durand kept going: he had his hands full, left, breaking his fall and hanging on to the reins. Helmet gone and crashing to earth, above. Durand continued holding on — and wouldn't let go even when Jappeloup shifted into reverse. The United States won the event, Britain was second and West Germany third. NEW YORK — Prices on the New York Stock Exchange got off to a booming start and then began to pull back, losing ground in fairly active trading as investors cashed in on profits from the recent surge.

The Dow Jones industrial average, up 6 points at the outset and down a couple at midday, was off 5.97 to 1,198.65 an hour before the close. It rallied Tuesday from a 14-point deficit to gain 1.66, which put it at the highest level since Feb. 2. It rose 94.64 the previous six

How Much Momentum Does The Market Have Left?

By EDWARD ROHRBACH

s there still time to be a high-school hero in the stock market?

Judging by the tire marks, a lot of rubber has just been laid on Wall Street. Stocks on an intra-day basis burned to a 150-point advance on the Dow-Jones average, with the Dow transportation index barreling ahead almost 25 percent.

"The charge has been so fast and furious it's hurt the overall quality of the stock market," warned William J. Gillard, director of investment policy at Kidder Peabody. "Wall Street has become irrational and volatile. It's a very unstable situation."

irrational and volatile. It's a very unstable situation.

He said the firm has just advised clients to stop buying and raise some cash. "A huge boulder has been thrown into the pond," he said. "Anyone fishing risks getting his boat tipped over by the waves."

Emerging confidence in Federal Reserve policy and recognition that Wall Street offered low prices touched off the rally, Mr. Gillard said, along with a new-found appreciation in the quality of company earnings.

"What the superbears missed was in looking strictly at reported earnings, not cash flow, which is supplying muscle power and flexibility to corporations," he said. "Their view was simplistic, making stocks appear so overvalued in relation to bonds. Mr. Gillard expects Wall Street will weather this period of indigestion only when Washington "asserts leadership" in setting down policy to reduce the federal deficit and attack other basic economic problems. But he is optimistic this will happen before the November election.

"In the meantime, steer clear of high P/E, high-expectation stocks," he advised. "Stick with the more established companies." Favorites he mentioned are Masco, Yellow Freight, Merck and Bristol-Myers.

owever, Martin Zweig, editor of Zweig Forecast, believes the "tremendous thrust" built up in the rally is not to be denied, at least over the near term. On the negative side, he pointed to "high premiums" such as for Value-Line futures, indicating general overbuying.

"In sum, the tape is bullish, but sentiment is growing optimistic much faster than in 1982 and monetary conditions are much poorer," he said. "So regard this as an intermediate advance.

"It should be profitable, but if interest rates do rise, those who prosper will be those nimble enough at selling sometime a little Laszlo Birinyi Jr. of Salomon Brothers also thinks "too many spigots have been turned on" for this rally to die quickly.

"It was fear of lightning striking twice," he said in answering why it started. "Not only were institutional money managers remembering what had happened in the great surge of August '82, but they're aware of September and October of that year, when there was no correction to let laggards in. "If you're not there when the dinner bell rings, there are no

Mr. Birinyi noted that another "mentality" impetus to the huge bying wave has been that "even if you're wrong, you've got plenty

However, while the big institutions jumped in, he said, individual investors have not yet begun to buy stocks. His computer analysis of trading on Wall Street showed that in last Friday's record volume, there were more transactions in 10,000 share blocks of AT&T — "ar" $19 a genuine candidate for public buying" — than there were 100-share trades.

How long the rally will last, he added, depends on whether the public will step in as they did in the fall of 1982 to give Wall Steet a second wind and whether "the optimistic assumptions the market is now making will come to fruition."

Richard J. Hoffman, who runs his own investment advisory service for a world-wide clientele, takes a less bullish view of the surge, though he thinks the uptrend it has generated will continue until the presidential election.

"It has been a crescendo rally," he said. "The smartest thing now for an investor to do would be to (Continued on Page 13, Col. 3)

Pressure Is Increasing in the U.S. For More Protection From Imports

By Steven Greenhouse

New York Times Service
NEW YORK — With cup in hand, industry after industry has lined up at the president's door asking for help against imports. This summer steel, copper and machine tools are all waiting for President Ronald Reagan to give them the import quotas they say they need to survive.

They have seen the president award import protection to U.S. textile makers, to Detroit's automakers, to Milwaukee's Harley-Davidson Motorcycle Co., to Pennsylvania's specialty steel producers and even to its mushroom growers. And now they feel their time has come for relief. While they have turned to the White House, wine makers and manufacturers of telecommunications equipment have taken a different route, marching to Capitol Hill to demand special trade legislation.

With imports at record levels and a presidential campaign under way, the pressures to beat back the wave of foreign-made products "are probably

Brick by brick, product by product, industry and labor are trying to build ever higher the wall against imports. Their petitions for relief filed with the International Trade Commission, the federal agency that makes recommendations to the president on import controls, have tripled since 1979, running at the rate of about 200 this year.

President Reagan has responded vigorously to these protectionist pressures. He has got Japan to agree to restrict auto shipments to the United States and the European Community to cut back steel sales. In addition, he has ordered stiff tariffs on motorcycles and quotas for specialty steels; just last week administration officials disclosed that they would tighten restrictions on textile imports. Big U.K. Banks Cut Base Rate By Half a Point

LONDON - Several large banks Wednesday reduced their base lending rates by half a per-centage point to 11½ percent from 12 percent, reflecting an unexpect-ed drop in the British money sup-

Analysts said that the pound's strengthening against the dollar Wednesday prompted speculation that a further rate cut may not be long in coming. In trading in London, the pound rose about a quarter of a cent to $1.3105.

The new rate was announced first by National Westminster Bank and followed by Barclays, Midlands and Lloyds banks, to take effect at the close of trading Thursday. Williams & Glyn later announced a similar cut.

The base rate had risen to 12 ercent on July 11 because of a sharp loss in the value of the pound and continuing high U.S. interest

Philip Wilkingson, National Westminster Group's chief executive officer, said, The immediate implication of market rates is that we can lower our base rate by ½ percent and we hope that this will come some way toward mitigating the effects of the last round of rate increases and assist our industrial and commercial borrowers."

Although talk of a further halfpoint cut next week was widely regarded as premature, the consensus in financial markets was that further reductions are probable in the coming months.

Stephen Lewis, of the broker Phillips & Drew, said he expects another half-point cut in base rates before the end of the month. National Westminster Bank's chief economist, David Kern, has predicted that base rates will be down to about 10 percent by the end of the year.

Others were more cautious, Alan Davies, manager of Barclays Bank Group economic department, said be expects a half-point reduction by November, followed by another half-point cut by February.

day's closing 2.9165 DM. A forecast of lower U.S. interest rates by Treasury Secre-tary Donald T. Regan removed support from the dollar.

In New York, the dollar traded lower at midday, with a bout of profit taking in late morning sending it to the day's lows dealers said.

U.S. Stockbrokers Face Tough Times

By Fred R. Bleakley New York Times Service NEW YORK -- Wall Street brokers may be cheering the record

stock volume of recent days, but the sudden rally will hardly cure all the security industry's ills. Personnel layoffs and expense cuts are the order of the day at dozens of investment houses. Most publicly owned firms lost money in the second quarter. And Tuesday, just three months after Lehman Brothers Kuhn Loeb was sold to Shearson/American Express, Becker Paribas announced its sale to Merrill Lynch. Indeed, the Securities Industry Association estimates that the first six months of this year were the worst for brokers in more than six years. With all this turmoil, many experts believe Wall Street may be headed for another wave of consolidations, similar to those that shrank the industry in 1970 and again seven years later. Carmakers Say EC's Pricing Plan Would Damage Troubled Industry

BRUSSELS - Carmakers say a European Commission plan to give anywhere in the Common Market, at lower prices for many than in their home country could hurt the troubled motor industry.

With sales stagnating and some companies in trouble, producers say moves discussed by government experts last week to tighten competition rules could price some carmakers out of the market.

They fear it could also bring a new flood of imports from Japan, which has already captured a large slice of the European car market.

Buyers are already supposed to be free to take advantage of price differences which make identical models up to $2,000 cheaper in some community countries than in

THE FOOD LOVER'S GUIDE TO PARIS

By Patricia Wells. 292 pp. $8.95. Workman Publishing, I West 39 Street, New York, N.Y. 10018; £5.95. Metheun, 11 New Fetter Lane, London EC4 T4EE.

PATRICIA WELLS'S "Food Lover's Guide to Paris" is one of the more charming and informative guides to the City of Light since Henri Gault and Christian Millau began their guide series 20 years ago.

Certainly it's one of the best guides in English. The photographs, which alone are worth the price of the book, are by Peter Turnley. There are 140 of them and, quite simply, they capture Paris.

It's important to get one thing straight: It isn't necessary to be a Cordon Bleu chef or a connoisseur of wine to love "The Food Lover's Guide." Wells is equally at home extolling the lowly croque-monsieur — grilled ham and cheese sandwich — of the boulevards as unraveling the secrets of Michel Rostang's goat cheese ravioli or André Lerch's kougelhops. There are all the expected restaurant reviews, of course, but there are dozens of small unexpected treasures as well. For example, there is a delightful item explaining the various soft drinks served at outdoor cases, and a brief list of popular cale snacks.

There is a short guide explaining how to order in a charcuterie. There is a history of bread, another on the city's outdoor markets. There is a discussion of whether or not to eat the rind of cheese. There is even a list of well known Parisians who breathed their last at a table, with their napkins on, so to speak.

Take, for example, Dr. Julien Offray de Lamettrie, who went to his eternal reward in 1751 while attempting to down a pheasant after already having "dined pleasantly." Or General Andache Junot, "who generally ate 300 oysters as an appetizer" and died insane, or Leon Gambetta, the Second Empire statesman who injudiciously consumed three generous servings of cassouler while still weak from a

Wells, restaurant reviewer for the International Herald Tribune who was formerly a food reporter for The New York Times and remains a frequent contributor, has lived in Paris for four years. There seems not to be a corner of the city that she has not poked into and discovered something exciting about. Her style is neither breathless nor dispassionate. Genuinely enthusiastic is nearer the mark, "I embrace this friendly, lively neighborhood bistro," she says of La Coquille. "From my first visit several years ago, I've felt at home with the owners, Paul and Catherine Blache, the surroundings, menu, wine list and the efficient caring staff.

The book is organized by subjects: restaurants, cafes, ten salons, wine bars, markets, pastry shops, bakeries, cheese stores, takeout shops, chocolate stores, speciality shops, wine and spirits stores, food bookstores, and kitchen and tableware shops. The listings under each subject are geographic, neighborhood by neighborhood.

Wells is an advocate of the if-you-can't-sayanything-good style of reporting and, in fact, she avoids most of the gastronomic brigands who, alas, lurk in the shadows in Paris, just as everywhere else. In fact, the only judgment I would question seriously is her kind word for Tartine, an old wine bar on the Rue du Rivoli. But then, everyone else praises it too, presumably on the theory that dirt is romantic. But the wines there are awful, and there is no excuse

To food lovers not in Paris at the moment, be assured that there is no better substitute than Wells's book. It's probably possible to gain weight just by reading it.

INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE GUIDE TO BUSINESS TRAVEL AND ENTERTAINMENT IN EUROPE

By Peter Graham. 224 pp. $9.95. Holt, Rinehart & Winston, 521 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y. 10175.

Reviewed by James Markham

THIS is an extremely clever and well-con-L ceived guide to 13 Western European cities where a business traveler or normal tourist might be likely to put up for a few days. Aiming at a relatively up-market, expense ac count clientele, Peter Graham has written witty and literate introductory essays on Amsterdam, Brussels, Copenhagen, Düsseldorf, Frankfurt, Geneva, London, Lyon, Milan, Munich, Paris, Stockholm, and Zurich and then given an unusually rich collection of advice on airports, local transportation, currency, tipping, telephoning, hotels, restaurants, nigh life, music, cinema, theater, museums, sightseeing, shopping, sports and weekend excursions. One is pleased to learn, for example, that the Amstel Hotel in Amsterdam has a "slightly overambitious pianist." A jogger in Copenhagen will be grateful to know that Tivoli is too crowded for a run but that if he or she tries a few kilometers around the well-landscaped Orsteds Park, the runner should avoid trying to befriend the swans. Unwilling to write off any of his 13 choices, York Times.

Graham does an estimable job of finding ways to enjoy Frankfurt, while reporting that "It was voted Europe's most boring city by the readers of the British magazine Business Traveller." The author has, for example, discovered that in Frankfurt both pool and carambolage, or pocket-less billiards, can be played from 10 A.M. to 1 P.M. at a place with it's name painted on the wrong side of the entry door.

A few quibbles are in order, perhaps. Why Lyon and not Stuttgart, West Germany's coming hi-technology center, the closest thing Western Europe has to Silicon Valley?

But these are cavils. This is a very good guide and one hopes that the last line of the title "In Europe" implies an intention to extend a good idea to the rest of the world. If there are future volumes, I would love to read a guide that would tell me how many hours it takes to get from the airport into the city of Lagos, how to get a drink in Jidda or where to go on the weekend from Hong Kong.

Malcolm Lowry's House

By Soll Sussman Associated Press

C UERNAVACA, Mexico — Devotees of Malcom Lowry's novel "Under the Volcano" sometimes come to this resort city in the mountains southwest of Mexico City just to tour its literary land-

But some unlikely preservation-ists here are concerned that a key one - a house where Lowry once lived — might be lost unless the state government can be persuaded to purchase it.

They are hoping that the acclaim for John Huston's recent film version of the book can be translated into momentum for their campaign to preserve what is known locally

as "The Lowry House."
The significance as far as Cuernavaca is concerned is that Lowry has put Cuernavaca on the map, said John Spencer, a mild-mannered British sculptor and Lowry admirer who has called civic meetings and written articles about the house. "He has presented the world a very accurate picture of Cuernavaca in the '30s.' The house at No. 17 Alejandro de Humboldt Street now has a "for sale" banner draped in front.

The British novelist rented an apartment in the house while fin-ishing "Under the Volcano" in 1946, and he may have lived in one of the bungalows in the house's lush garden while working on early drafts in the 1930s.

It appears in the book as what Monsieur Laruelle calls his "madhouse." The house's tower — only the base still remains — is the site for a key scene involving the doomed Consul, his brother Hugh and Yvonne.

The house and grounds now are in dilapidated condition, but on a clear day it is still possible to see the volcano Popocatepetl from the Lowry gave Cuernavaca the name "Quauhnahuac" in his novel, which chronicles the last 24 hours in the life of Geoffrey Firmin, a former British consul drowning in alcohol. Still attractive in his middle years, he seems among the most favored of men, with rank, education, intelligence and wit. Built around his fatal malaise is the return of his estranged wife who has had an affair with his half-brother. Some critics believe the novel's strong reputation and some readers' fervent admiration stem as much from Lowry's troubled and alcoholic lifestyle as from "Under the Volcano" itself. Lowry died in

"I just feel that 'Under the Volcano' is a very great novel. I don't buy that it's a cult novel," said the 56-year-old Spencer, who learned about the book after he came to Cuernavaca 18 years ago.

He started campaigning to pre-serve the house after it was sold to an owner who pressured tenants to leave so it could be converted into a more valuable business property.

Allies were found at the Morelos State Film Commission, which cooperated with Huston on the filming of "Under the Volcano" last

Juan José Perez Padilla, the commission's head, earlier this year obtained a "stop work" court order on renovation of the house.

"I don't have any hope we can raise enough money to make a dent," said Meg Donahey, an elderly American resident of Mexico who works as a publicist for the commission. But, she added, the group hopes that at least starting a purchase fund would get Governor Lauro Ortega's attention.

A report from architects involved in a state government program to beautify Cuernavaca recnmended purchasing the house and grounds for conversion to a cultural center, but the current economic crisis in Mexico makes such purchases hard to justify.

The Cuernavaca that Lowry wrote about in his blend of fact and fiction was a quiet town frequented by expatriates.

Cuernavaca remains a resort, but the growth of industry and its proximity to giant Mexico City 53 miles to the northeast have made it a city in its own right, where the foreign community is not as prominent as
